Understanding and controlling neural networks through the problem they are trained to solve

Tom McCoy is a postdoctoral researcher in the Department of Computer Science at Princeton. He received his PhD in Cognitive Science at Johns Hopkins. Starting in January 2024, he will be an Assistant Professor of Linguistics at Yale. In his research, he aims to bridge the divide between linguistics and NLP: How can we use theories from linguistics to help us understand and evaluate NLP models, and how can advances in NLP help us answer questions from linguistics?
